viewing the action of the Memphis Presby-tery in the case of Rev. Dr. Long, of this DEAR BROTHER-Your card and note : thand. I thank you in the name of truth at hand. I thank you in the name of truth for standing up for New School doctrine as you did on your examination. But the thing in one important view of it was all wrong, and I am led by my sense of what is due to myself and all New School men in the Southern General Assembly to write this letter, which I respectfully request to have published in the Memphis APPEAL. The Memphis Presbytery had no right to examine you on the Old School interpretation of the Confession of Faith. Such examination was in utter vio-lation of the terms of union between the New School United Synod and the Southern Old School General Assembly, in 1864. That ion, without going into particulars, was, in simplest common sense, that the Oid School brother was of right to interpret the Bible and the Confession of Faith as he had done before the two bodies were made one, and that the New School was of right to interpret the Bible and the Confession of Faith as he had done before the coming together of the two bodies. No man in the Presbyterian Church, South or North, ever imagined that Dr. Boyd, of Winchester, Virginia; Dr. Read, of Richmond, Virginia; Campston, of Maryland; Marshall, of Fayetteville, Tennessee; F. A. Ross, of Huntsville, Alabama, and scores of other brethren, became Old School

No one in all the Presbyterian Church could by possibility have believed they would consent to union upon such terms. And if not, then the Memphis Presbytery had no right to examine Rev. N. M. Long of the Old-School interpretation of the Bible as given in the Old-School understanding o he Confession of Faith. What ought the Presbytery to have done?
